

GEOGRAPHY.

The October number of the Corahill Magazine opens with the concluding chapter of Mr. Thackeray's "Four Georges," and very severe it is upon "the rascallest, sweetest young Prince," George the First and Fourth. There is a satirical portrait of George.

"To make a portrait of him at first seemed a matter of small difficulty. There is his countenance, like a tough good chalk, I could at this very desk perform a recognizable likeness of him. And yet, after reading of him in scores of volumes, hunting him through old magazines and newspapers, having him here at a ball, there at a public dinner, there at a race, and so forth, you find you have nothing—not a coat and wig and a mask smiling below it—noting but a great similitude. His sire and grandfathers were men. One knows what they were like; what they would do in given circumstances; that on occasion they fought and demeaned themselves like tough good soldiers. They had friends whom they liked according to their natures; enemies whom they hated freely; passions, and actions, and individualities of their own. The sailor who came after George was a man; the pakeet York was a man, big, burly, loud, jolly, cunning, courageous.

But this George, what was he? I look through all his life and recognize but a boy and a girl. I try and take him to pieces, and find sick stockings, pudding, stays, a coat with frogs and a fur collar, a star and blue ribbon, a pocket-handkerchief prodigiously scented, one of Trautlet's best nutty brown wigs rocking with oil, a set of teeth, and a high black stock. I know of no more understanding, and then nothing. I know of no sentiment that he ever distinctly uttered. Documents are published under his name, but people write them—private letters, but people write them. He put a great George, or George R., at the bottom of the page and fancied he had written the paper; some bookkeeper's clerk, some poor author, some man did the work; saw to the spelling; cleaned up the slovenly sentences; and gave the lax unadorned slipshod sort of consistency. He must have had an individuality; the dancing master whom he emulated, surpassed, and then to the tailor who cut his coats for him. But, about George, one can get at nothing at all.

And now, outside. I am certain; is paid and tailor's work; there may be something behind, but what? We cannot get at the character; no doubt never shall. Will men of the future have better to do than to unswindle and interpret that royal old mummy? I own I once used to think it would be good sport to pursue him, fasten on him and pull him down, but now I am ashamed to mount and lay good dogs on, to summon a full bill, and then to haul the poor game." And there is an anecdote in which "the first gentleman in Europe," as it was the fashion to call the Georges, does not figure very creditably.

"And now I have one more story of the bacchanalian sort, in which Clarence and York, and the very highest personage of the realm, the great Prince Regent, all play parts. The least took place at the Pavilion, at Brighton, and was described to me by a gentleman who was present at the scene. In Gilray's caricatures, and amongst Fox's jolly associates, there figures a great nobleman, the Duke of Norfolk, called by the Norfolkites, "the Duke," and celebrated for his table exploits. He had quarreled with the Prince, like the rest of the Whigs; but a sort of reconciliation had taken place, and now, being a very old man, the Prince invited him to dine and sleep at the Pavilion, and the old duke drove over from his Castle of Arundel, with his famous equipage of gray horses, still remembered in Sussex.

"The Prince of Wales had concocted with his royal brother a notable scheme for making the old man drunk. Every person at the table was enjoined to drink with the Duke; and he was to be the only one to do so. He began to see that there was a conspiracy against him; he drank glass for glass; he overthrew many of the brave. At last the first gentleman of Europe proposed bumpers of brandy. One of the royal brothers filled a great glass for the Duke. He stood up and tossed off the drink. "Now," says he, "I will have my carriage and a groom." The Prince urged upon him his previous promise to sleep under the roof where he had been so generously entertained. "No," he said, "I had had enough of such hospitality. A trap had been set for him; he must leave the place at once, and never enter its doors more."

"The carriage was called, and came; but, in the half-hour's interval, the liquor had proved too potent for the old man, his host's generous purpose was answered, and the Duke's old gray head lay stupefied on the table. Nevertheless, when his post-chaise was announced, he staggered to it as well as he could, and, stumbling in, bade the postillions drive to Arundel. They drove him for half an hour round and round the Pavilion lawn; the poor old man fancied he was going home. When he awoke that morning he was bed at the prince's hideous house at Brighton. They had placed him there for sixpence; they had hidden there every day; and sometimes buffoons and mount-banks hire the Riting House and do their tricks and tumbling there. The trees are still there, and the gravel walks around which the poor old sinner was trotted. I can fancy the flushed faces of the royal princes as they support themselves at the portico pillars, and look on at old Norfolk's disgrace; but I can't fancy how the man who perpetrated it continued to be called a gentleman."

THE CASE OF A DEVALUER.—Ex-Postmaster Isaac V. Fowler, of New York, the man who supplied his political and other friends with money belonging to the Government, is still enjoying himself at Havana, it we may believe correspondence at that place. The career of this defaulter, which was at one time brilliant, is not likely to terminate in a manner to form a moral where with to adorn the annals of history. His sympathizing friends in New York, it is said, have actually agreed to place him in charge of some valuable gold works in Mexico. Their faith in his honorable intentions may be great. In either case the crime described in the age to see such atrocious conduct palliated and defended by men claiming to hold the rank of honest and reputable merchants and citizens.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.—BONNETS.—A happy medium has been found for bonnets.

While there is less of them than ever before, the front is more projecting, and is not thrown up in the preposterous way which has incurred such just censure. One "duck" may be minutely described. Fancy a crown of black and white lace, the front trimmed with white on either side of a band of light green velvet, a white marabout feather, tipped with green, drooping deliciously, and the inside trimmed with white and green and gold! Magenta is a color very much in vogue—a brilliant red—and here is a bonnet of Magenta velvet, trimmed at the front with lilac, the cape and crown of white tulle trimmed with Magenta, and the inside with white flowers and silk. The unanimous verdict is that the front shall be close to the face. There is a charming broad bonnet of plain white corded silk, with a double cape. Round the crown is a pointed leaf, and the trimming is white illusion and lace. The decorations on the outside are white roses, green leaves and beads, and in orange blossoms. Of ornaments there is no end of delicate and divine ideas. Gilt figures largely in all, but Madame Demorest clearly asserts that tinsel is "in bad taste and will be too common to be elegant or distinctive." The dainty feathers of the Parisian—can this be a corruption of the bird of Paradise?—of the Russian duck, and of the bonnet but recently named, are used in soft showers over many a lovely head. There is also an entirely new and very clever idea—a chain of medallions to encircle the bonnet. Prices were never better.

COATS AND MANTLES.—It is generally conceded that the loose sack will be most commonly worn. There are numerous designs, adapted to all ages, and apparently, to both sexes. A new idea is the Zouave jacket, which fits neatly to the waist, and is accompanied by a cloak, so that there is accommodation for all conditions of the atmosphere. The Zouave and the Zouave are very elegant, and the coat of a silk sack varies from $40 to $150. Velvet remains its proud supremacy. A cloak of this rich material, lined with purple silk, and embroidered at the edges with a machine stitch in vivid colors, may, we think, be called a "stunner." For the opera, silks of the most gorgeous striped have been imported in bewildering profusion.

A novel and pleasing invention is a Turkish cloak, over which, from the left shoulder, depends a graceful scarf, while the right shoulder is protected by a shawl. For those who desire to wear a Turkish cloak, the Zouave jacket, denominated Zouave, quite Arabian in design. It is fitted to the shoulders in a sack form, with Bishop sleeves and Japanese cuffs, and has two collars.

SHAWLS.—One house in New York has a stock of shawl's value, valued at $150,000. Their separate values range from $20 to $1,500, and their patterns are sumptuous beyond description. The extreme agony is a heavy gold embroidery, and the expense of such luxury we dare not disclose.

SKIRTS.—Let us trace again the crinoline. Let us not make take that name in vain. Crinoline is a myth; they don't wear it. The spring skirt is again immortal. As many as sixty springs are sometimes worn, and by an ingenious contrivance, the "great annoyance of tapes sticking on the strings" has been effectually remedied, by passing the fastening through the covering of the springs, making it impossible for them to slip or break away. The bell shape is the most popular, but there is no political preference in this fashion, however much corrupt fashions may endeavor to fasten it upon the ladies.

SHIRTS.—There are several brilliant novel in this delightful department of the toilette. There is a shawl with lapels that may be turned down from the delicate under for the house, or may closely encase it for the street. There is a quilted carriage coat of all colors, bound with velvet. Balmoral boots, that lace, maintain their hold upon the affections, and are universally worn. Of toilette slippers there is an infinite variety. One Broadway establishment displays five hundred dozens of pairs of them every year. Bridal slippers of silk and satin, with roses that alone are worth $12.50, are largely sold at $40 the pair.

THE MARKET.—The market opened today with more activity, and prices are firm. There were sales of Union street Superfine Flour at $2.75. Very little doing in the other flour market.
